I embarked on this study nearly twenty years ago when I was still a graduate student at Kyoto University. This book comprises eight papers I wrote from that time through 2007. I added further material dealing with the period from the 1920s to the liberation of Korea following Japan's defeat in 1945, and completed my Ph.D. dissertation in 2007. My book Nihon no Chōsen shokuminchi shihai to keisatsu, 1905–1945 (Japan's Colonial Rule of Korea and the Police, 1905–1945) published by Azekura Shobō in 2009 was based on the dissertation. This monograph contains material corresponding to the first part of the Japanese book.

In this project of transforming my dissertation into an English language book, the support of colleagues and staff members at the International Research Center for Japanese Studies has been invaluable. I am especially grateful for the editorial advice and assistance of Professor Patricia Fister at all stages, and would also like to thank Publications Editor Eri Shiraishi for her tireless checking of the translated text and complex footnotes. The translation of the Japanese text was prepared by the Center for Intercultural Communication in Tokyo.
